Morocco, and Damascus.—There is a great deal of story of the French army in Morocco, and the English, sent to the aid of the Sultan, have been doing a great deal of good. The first step was the capture of the city of Fez, and the establishment of a new government. The French army then moved on to the city of Marrakech, and the English army then moved on to the city of Algiers. The French army then moved on to the city of Tunis, and the English army then moved on to the city of Tripoli. The French army then moved on to the city of Constantinople, and the English army then moved on to the city of Smyrna. The French army then moved on to the city of Athens, and the English army then moved on to the city of Thessalonica. The French army then moved on to the city of Salonica, and the English army then moved on to the city of Istanbul.
